

OPEN LETTER FROM 176 ORGANIZATIONS
SUPPORTING THE INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS BUDGET

September 13, 2013

Dear Senator,

As organizations working to end poverty and respond to emergencies around the world, we write to urge you to support the Senate's fiscal year 2014 overall funding level for the International Affairs Budget in order to protect its humanitarian assistance and poverty-focused development accounts throughout all upcoming budget negotiations.

The Senate Appropriations Committee has forged a bipartisan agreement to support strong funding levels for the International Affairs Budget as a whole. This overall level recognizes current fiscal limitations while enabling continued investments that save lives, increase our national security, and spur economic development both at home and around the world. As negotiations move forward, it is critical that funding levels for all poverty-focused development and humanitarian accounts within the International Affairs Budget are restored and protected, reflecting the strength of the topline number. Key lifesaving programs, including those in health and education, must not be left behind.

While we know that our nation's fiscal house must be put in order, it must be done thoughtfully and comprehensively, with attention to the needs of people living in extreme poverty around the world, while ensuring a bright and secure future for the U.S. The budget decisions you face in the months ahead are of tremendous importance to millions of people around the world and the future of the United States' security and economic prosperity.

Sequestration has proven itself to be a reckless and self-destructive way of balancing our books and will put the world's poorest at further risk, put the U.S. on the sidelines in influencing rapidly transforming regions of the world, and signal a decline of U.S. leadership in promoting a more stable and prosperous world. Deficit reduction negotiations provide an opportunity for you to ensure that U.S. leadership remains strong amidst ongoing crises of historic proportions.

Addressing the nation's deficit by imposing an additional round of severe cuts to the International Affairs Budget – on top of the 20.7% reductions since fiscal year 2010 – is not the answer. At less than 1% of our federal budget, further cuts to poverty-focused assistance will not address our deficit, but they will risk lives and contribute to further destabilization of volatile regions critical to U.S. interests and stymie efforts to give the poor the tools they need to pull themselves out of poverty. These budget cuts could marginalize the U.S. in rapidly transforming regions and signal a dramatic decline of national leadership in promoting a more stable, peaceful and prosperous world.

This year has witnessed crises of historic proportions. Ongoing violence in Syria has resulted in nearly 6 million displaced persons, further destabilizing the Middle East. Conflict has displaced hundreds of thousands of people in Sudan and South Sudan, including 1.9 million Darfuris and 220,000 refugees from South Kordofan and Blue Nile seeking safety in South Sudan and Ethiopia. In Mali, nearly half a million people continue to be displaced, and 3.5 million are struggling with malnutrition. Along with the potential for significant natural disasters, these and other crises demonstrate in stark terms the dynamic nature of the world around us and the need for strong and effective diplomatic and development tools.

We cannot betray our nation's longstanding moral leadership in aiding the world's poorest and most vulnerable people by scaling back humanitarian assistance as food crises and conflict threaten millions of lives. We cannot afford to curtail critical programs that expand markets for U.S. products and help create American jobs. We cannot turn our backs on the millions of people seeking to democratically choose their own leaders and government institutions. And we cannot risk the prospect of future, expensive military interventions by ignoring problems that can be addressed today.

As you work towards finalizing the budget for fiscal year 2014, we urge you to demonstrate bold leadership by supporting the Senate's overall funding levels for the International Affairs Budget in order to protect funding for all poverty-focused development and humanitarian accounts included in this budget. We cannot afford further deep cuts that risk lives, compromise America's moral traditions, and place the country's strategic interests at risk.

Thank you for your consideration.
